COPPERHEAD COLITICAL ECONOMY

War, we have said at other times, is a great revolutionist, and changes political relations as order of things upon the face of the earth --But we were not prepared for the very remarkable discovery in Political Economy which has been evolved during the present struggle, as to the relation which education bears to a properly informed politician and a good and safe citizen.

It has been left to one of the copportund school of polities to make this remarkable discovery. Whether if he the natural production of this particular school of politics, or whether we are indebted for it to the astate brain of the author himself, we wot not, but receive the discovery as we do that of any other remarkable emanation, with thankfulnes and pleasure, that a new and reformatory idea has been burn into this dark world.

The discoverer, or perhaps more properly the inventor of this new idea in Political Fean omy is Hon, James Brooks, of the New York Express. The new idea—the great idea was promulgated in the course of some remarks made at a cancus of kindred spirits in the city of New York, to devise ways and means of establishing a blockade of the way North. It was intended, we believe, as a private affair-a sert of a Devils Kitchen Cabiner, but a leaky reporter, who deemed the discovery of the Honorable gentleman as of too much consequence to the world, to be suffered to languish in ignoble obscurity and "wrote it: sweetness on the desert air," "took notes" and "printed them."

The words by which the great idea was foretravailled are significant, piquant and e-igiωθ. Hear bim:

"The people of New England are infinitely befor the people of the South and other parts of the country in their general, understanding of poli-ries and the duties of citiens,"

There's a discovery for you-the part of the Union to which levery educated Southerner for the past ball century is indebted for his education, and the region from which the majority of the teachers and tutors were supplied to Southern families and schools, is yet behind the enlightened land of Dixie in intelligence. Some poet attered the words that "Brooks run to rivers and fivers ton to seas"-and suppose that seas was intended to rhyme with some other authorious word : but, if this Brooks will move on rapidly through the gradations suggested in the lines of the Poet, he need be at no trouble to stop at 56 insignificant an adhir as a sea, but if he will only keep on till he brings up plumply in the middle of the none majestic Atlantic, he usedn't mind the chance and the country can well space him, now that he has done her such signal service—and besides, in that idea and the one contained in the following morecan, James Brooks has culminated-he canachies nothing more for himself or others. Hear him again :

"I have seen men sitting on stumps by the road-life, and in the words of the South, who unable either to read or to write, were yet better informed on any thing relating to the general government and the political questions of the time, than the best among the children of New England, with all their book learning and

There now the truth is out. Ye loyal men of the North make haster to finish up the war, for matil in he timished you must remain in a complete state of barbarism, and in the darkness of iled to our "wayward sisters," attend a Soutje em lanking, and drink in inspiration from the metrum of some Southern stumporator, who has read all the newspapers end inwardly digested them, and then deals them out in literary delais for the masses. We entertained the old fogy idea that the freemen of this country were so admented as to be capable of doing their own thinking in politics and everything else. But private judgment is an obsolete idea. Surely the times make strange bedfellows. When gradiens, with such recommendations as he decens this same James Brooks was a Know Nothing he ran a filt with Archbishop Hughes and the Catholic Church on this some point, among other religious matters, and we can see to better reason for his adopting the very lides of ignoring that same private judgment in politics save that he is a knew rolling still.
